

Making IT
good for society

'Fellow of the British Computer Society (FBCS)' is the highest professional grade of British Computer Society - incorporated by Royal Charter.

"Fellow of the British Computer Society is a title conferred by the British Computer Society for members of the computing profession who have made an outstanding contribution to the advancement of computing". Currently BCS has more than 82,000 members across the globe (across 151 countries) and typically top 1 % of its members are Fellows. The Fellow elevation committee of BCS evaluates election to Fellow on the following criteria ( https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/British_Computer_Society):

- (a) Demonstrate leadership in the profession
- (b) Wide acknowledgement of specific IT expertise
- (c) Contribution to advancement of knowledge
- (d) Eminent individual
- (e) Authority and Seniority in the IT field